1. What are cookie files?

Cookie files (cookies) are small text files, saved on the end device (e.g., computer, smartphone) of the user during the browsing of a website. They contain information essential for the basic functioning of the site and serve to improve its operation.

2. Purpose of using cookies on this website.

This website uses cookie files for the following purposes:

a) Essential for the website's operation (technical):

These cookies are absolutely necessary to:

- Maintain the continuity of the user's session while browsing the website.
- Ensure the correct and secure operation of the system.
- Remember that the user is logged in while moving between subpages.

These files are essential for the functioning of the website and are not used for collecting personal data for purposes other than technical ones.

b) Analytical:

These cookies allow us to understand how users interact with the website. They are used to:

- Collect anonymous, aggregated information about the number of visitors, traffic sources, and the most popular subpages.
- Analyse general patterns of user behaviour on the website.
- Continuously improve the functionality and performance of our website.

Data collected via analytical cookies are used solely for statistical purposes and do not allow for the direct identification of the user.

3. Legal basis.

- Essential cookies: The processing of cookies absolutely necessary for the operation of the website is carried out based on the so-called "legitimate interest" and is necessary for providing the service by electronic means. Their use does not require separate consent.

- Analytical cookies: The use of cookies for analytical purposes requires us to obtain your voluntary consent. During your first visit to the website, a banner will be displayed requesting your expression of such consent.

4. User's rights.

The user retains the full range of rights related to data protection and privacy. Internet browsers offer the possibility to independently manage cookie file settings, including blocking or deleting them.
